QUESTIONS PRESENTED FOR REVIEW

Whether the "Maximum Recovery Rule" as prescribed by the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, as the same pertains to discretionary general damage awards, operates to substitute the award of a Jury, which had been approved by the Trial Judge, and thus works to preclude a Litigant to a Trial by Jury as is guaranteed by the Seventh Amendment to the United States Constitution.

Whether the opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit makes a detailed appraisal of the evidence bearing on the damages awarded, so as to enable the reviewing Court to conclude that allowing the award to stand would be a denial of justice, as is required by this Court's decision in Grunenthal v. Long Island Railroad Co., 393 U.S. 156, 21 (L. Ed. 309, 89 S.Ct. 331 (1968)).

THE LIST OF PARTIES

Pursuant to Rule 21.1(b), Rules of the Supreme Court, counsel for Petitioners certify that the following is a complete list of all parties in the proceeding in the Court whose judgment is sought to be reviewed and, additionally, all parties and persons believed to be interested in the outcome of this Petition:

1. Beatrice M. Hansen, Petitioner;
2. Johns-Manville Sales Corporation, Respondent.

PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI

Petitioners pray that a Writ of Certiorari issue for Review of the Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit entered in the above entitled cause on June 11, 1984.

OPINIONS BELOW

The opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit is reported at 734 F.2d 1036 and is printed in Appendix A to this Petition, infra, p. A-1. The Order of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit denying the Petition for Rehearing is printed in Appendix B, infra, p. A-23. The Verdict of the Trial Court is printed in Appendix C, infra, p. A-25.

JURISDICTION

The Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit was entered on June 11, 1984. The Order of the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals denying Petitioners' Motion for Reconsideration was entered on September 12, 1984. Jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C., Sec. 1254(1).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

ANDREW T. HANSEN, ("Decedent") began working for TODD SHIPYARDS in Galveston, Texas, in 1940, as a pipefitter, whereby he would tear out old insulation in ships and install new insulation. During his employment, Decedent worked primarily with products containing asbestos that were manufactured by JOHNS-MANVILLE. Decedent suffered an ankle injury in 1976 and retired.

In 1978, at age 65, Decedent who had been in good health began to develop chest problems. MR. HANSEN was diagnosed as suffering from severe respiratory illnesses, being that of asbestos-associated diseases, namely, Asbestosis and Malignant Mesothelioma. MR. HANSEN lived for 13 months thereafter, whereby he was hospitalized five (5) times and had to undergo chemotherapy. MR. HANSEN died on August 5, 1979.

ANDREW T. AND BEATRICE MAE HANSEN were married in 1935 and the life expectancy of MR. HANSEN, before his death, would have been 13 years. Along these lines, ANDREW T. HANSEN, JR., the son of Decedent, testified at the Trial Court level that his mother, BEATRICE MAE HANSEN, does not even drive an automobile and that she was totally dependent on MR. HANSEN to take her wherever she wanted to go, as she never drove. Also, it was Decedent who kept the family check book and did all of those types of things.

On June 6, 1978, Decedent informed his wife that he had to go to the doctor because his chest was hurting. He went to see his family doctor, Dr. Forman, and was placed in the hospital. This initial hospital stay was for a period of one week, but he was back in the hospital the following week for an operation which was to be performed by Dr. Williams. When Dr. Williams operated on MR. HANSEN, whereby upon cutting into his chest, it was noticed that there were large fleshy appearing tumors adherent to the lung and also invading the Emediastinum and encircling the Aorta. In other words, he had a difused tumor in the chest. It was obvious that the malignancy was too wide spread to resect, and there was nothing that the doctors could do for the patient surgically.

During the time subsequent to the diagnosis and before his death, MR. HANSEN was in constant pain due to his severe respiratory illnesses, as referred to above. Due to his untimely death, MR. HANSEN was deprived of his retirement years and of the time he looked forward to having so much, as he was planning to spend it with his grandchildren, and to do all of the things he liked to do best, all of which were to transpire during these retirement years.

Decedent's next hospital visit was in March of 1979, and he then had to return to the hospital on May 17, 1979, for an additional seven days. After his release in May of 1979, he had to return to the hospital once again in July of 1979, whereby he was released and had to return once again in August of 1979, at which time he did not return, having died on August 5, 1979. Thus, from the time MR. HANSEN was diagnosed as having Mesothelioma, he lived for 13 months thereafter. During the 13 month period, he was hospitalized 5 times, had to undergo chemotherapy, was in constant pain and was aware of his eminent death.

MR. HANSEN was particularly fond of his grandchildren. He had a deer lease where they would hunt and fish. He was looking forward to his retirement years, as he and his son belonged to a travel trailer club and his son had a travel trailer and MR. HANSEN was always talking and looking forward to the time when he retired, and how he too wanted to buy a travel trailer and do some traveling around the country.

MR. HANSEN'S daughter, testified that she had been an x-ray technician for 11 years and that she learned that her father had Mesothelioma in July of 1978, shortly after his first operation. She was living in Trinidad at the time and came home in the middle of July, 1978, to be with her father. She testified that her father was aware of his certain death. He knew he was going to die in about a year's time after the diagnosis of Mesothelioma. MR. HANSEN'S daughter testified that he began Cobalt treatments in August of 1978 and she would take him for those treatments. The Cobalt treatment was to his left side in the front and in the back. MR. HANSEN would get nauseated as a result of the treatments. The Cobalt treatments left his throat sore and irritated and he also had trouble eating. Shortly after they operated on MR. HANSEN, he underwent chemotherapy. She would take him for his chemotherapy treatments and they would make him sick. He also had to take pain pills and Codeine for the pain but little did they help. He even tried Methadone and that did not even help the pain, so they had to increase his doses of the pain killer, Percodan.

The reason Decedent would go into the hospital was because he could not stand the pain, as it was constant. After the chemotherapy treatments, MR. HANSEN had to carry a pail around with him. He would come home after the chemotherapy treatments and he would either vomit in the car, or when he got home, and he would go straight to bed. Every waking moment for the last 10 months of MR. HANSEN'S life was accompanied by pain.

A Jury Trial on Special Interrogatories was had and Judgment in the amount of $2,070,500.00 was entered on May 11, 1982. Actual damages constituted $1,070,-500.00 and the Jury also awarded $1,000,000.00 in Punitive damages. Post Trial Motions were filed by JOHNS-MANVILLE, all of which were denied, and a Supersedes Bond was filed and approved.

The United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit held that the sum of $260,000.00 which was awarded by the Jury to BEATRICE MAE HANSEN, Widow of ANDREW T. HANSEN, DECEASED, was excessive, and it considered the "maximum verdict" for care and services over the 13 year life expectancy of Decedent that the District Court should have permitted to stand, without Remittitur, was $40,000.00. Similarly, the Fifth Circuit determined that the Jury's award of $800,000.00 for pain and suffering and mental anguish, to which MR. HANSEN had experienced, was contrary to reason, thus holding that the $800,000.00 awarded by the Jury was excessive.

The United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit also determined, that since a Remittitur of actual damages was felt to be required in this case, it found that a proportionate reduction of Punitive Damages was required, and accordingly, the Fifth Circuit determined that a Remittitur of Punitive damages to $300,000.00 was proper.

Thus, the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit concluded that the Judgment of the District Court was affirmed in part, reversed in part, and remanded with instructions. A Motion for Reconsideration was filed on behalf of BEATRICE MAE HANSEN to which the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit denied.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

There are four compelling reasons why a review on Writ of Certiorari should be granted in this case:

1. The opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit conflicts with prior opinions of this Court regarding an Appellate Court's scope of review in reviewing damage awards which are claimed to be excessive, in that it failed to make a detailed appraisal of the evidence bearing on the damages awarded, so as to enable the reviewing Court to conclude that allowing the award to stand would be a denial of justice, as is required by this Court's decision in Grunenthal v. Long Island Railroad Co., 393 U.S. 156, 29 L.Ed. 309, 89 S.Ct. 331 (1968).

2. The decision of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit with its "maximum recovery rule", as the same pertains to discretionary general damage awards, operates to substitute its verdict in place of that of the Jury, which had been approved by the Trial Judge, and thus works to preclude Petitioners herein of a Trial by Jury, as is guaranteed by the Seventh Amendment to the United States Constitution.

3. The opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit conflicts with prior opinions of the Fifth Circuit's well established standard of review, as the same pertains to the review of awards which are claimed to be excessive, and instead substitutes the award made by the Jury with a maximum verdict as determined by the Fifth Circuit, which goes beyond its allowable scope of review.

4. The decision of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit conflicts with opinions of other Circuits regarding the scope of Appellate review, as the same pertains to damages claimed as being excessive.

Although the Supreme Court has not spoken conclusively on the scope of Appellate Review, as the same pertains to reviewing alleged excessive verdicts, which is the more reason to grant the present Writ of Certiorari at Bar, the High Court did grant Certiorari in 1955 in a case in which the only question presented was whether the Court of Appeals has power to review a denial of a New Trial for excessive damages. The Court never reached the question of the power of the Appellate Court however, since it found that there was evidence to support the verdict and that the Court of Appeals whether or not it had the power, should not have intervened. Since the Court of Appeals had treated the verdict in that case as if it were an extreme example of an excessive verdict, the reinstatement of the Trial Court Judgment by the Supreme Court showed, at a minimum, that Courts of Appeal are to be cautious indeed in interferring with the decisions of Trial Courts on Motions claiming excessive damages. Neese v. Southern Railway Co., 350 U.S. 77, 76 S.Ct. 131 (1955); Wright & Miller, Federal Practice & Procedure, Section 2820, Chapter 8, page 130, n. 19, p. 130.

The most recent expression from the Supreme Court came in 1968 in the case of Grunenthal v. Long Island Railroad Co., 393 U.S. 156, 89 S.Ct. 331 (1968). Once again the Court granted Certiorari to consider whether the Seventh Amendment bars Appellate review of the size of a verdict. Once again, the Court avoided deciding the question of power for it found that "assuming, without deciding, that the Court of Appeals was in power to review the denial and invoke the correct standard of review, the action of the Trial Judge, as we review the evidence, should not have been disturbed."

Assuming reviewability, the Court in Grunenthal, supra, made it plain that in such a case the Court of Appeals may not reverse the denial of a New Trial Motion on the grounds of excessive or insufficiency of the verdict except on a detailed appraisal of the evidence and a finding that there has been an abuse of discretion. See also, 6A, J. Moore, Moore's Federal Practice, 59.08 (6) at p. 59-175, n. 58.

The United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit cites Grunenthal in its opinion in Sam's Style Shop v. Cosmos Broadcasting Corp., 694 F.2d 998 (5th Cir. 1982), as there is set forth in said opinion that the Supreme Court has assumed, but never explicitly decided, that Appellate Courts may review the size of a Jury verdict without violating the Seventh Amendment. The Fifth Circuit in Sam's, supra, continued to state that in reviewing a Jury award, they are actually reviewing the District Court's denial of the Motion for New Trial or for Remittitur. It was further stated that because the District Court has a wide range of discretion in acting on such Motions, its standard of review is not simply right or wrong but abuse of discretion. Sam's, supra, at 106.

The Fifth Circuit in Sam's, supra, further stated that the test for this review has been stated by the Fifth Circuit in various ways stating, for example, that there is no such abuse of discretion unless there is a complete absence of evidence to support the verdict citing Vallot v. Central Gulf Lines, Inc., 641 F.2d 347 (5th Cir. 1981) (Per Curiam); Crador v. Louisiana Department of Highways, 625 F.2d 1227, 1230 (5th Cir. 1980) cert. denied, 452 U.S. 915, 101 S.Ct. 3048, 69 L.Ed.2d 417 (1981). The Fifth Circuit further stated that:

> "We have also said that the verdict cannot be upset unless it is so excessive that no reasonable Juror, unswayed by passion or prejudice, could have award> ed that amount. See Allen v. Seacoast Products, Inc., 623 F.2d 355, 364 (1980). At other times, we have articulated the question as whether the award was contrary to all reason. See Menard, 538 F.2d at 1088-89; Machado v. States Marine-Isthmian Agency, Inc., 411 F.2d 584, 586 (5th Cir. 1969). See generally Wood v. Diamond M. Drilling Co., 691 F.2d 1165, 1168 (5th Cir. 1982) (citing cases). Which ever way the test is articulated, before setting aside a verdict as excessive, we must make a detailed appraisal of the evidence bearing on damages and be satisfied the award is completely without support in the record and evidences prejudice or speculation rather than a reasonable review of the evidence. See Grunenthal, 393 U.S. at 159, 89 S.Ct. at 33, 21 L.Ed.2d at 313. . . ."

The Fifth Circuit stated in Wood v. Diamond M. Drilling Co., 691 F.2d 1165 (5th Cir. 1982), that it affords great deference to Jury findings. The Court further acknowledged that the Seventh Amendment to the Constitution provides that no fact tried by a Jury shall be re-examined by any Court of the United States except according to the Rules of Common Law. The Court continued by stating that an Appellate Court may not re-weigh the evidence or set aside the Jury's verdict merely because the Appellate Judges could have drawn different inferences or conclusions from the evidence, or feel that other results might be more reasonable. It was further stated in Wood, that the most an Appellate Court can do is to determine whether there was any competent and substantial evidence in the record which fairly tends to support the verdict, citing Mortensen v. United States, 322 U.S. 369, 64 S.Ct. 1037, 88 L.Ed. 1331 (1944). Thus, the Fifth Circuit concluded that an Appellate Court will not overturn the Jury's verdict, even though contradictory evidence was presented, if there is an evidentiary basis for the verdict, citing Basham v. Pennsylvania Railroad Co., 372 U.S. 699, 83 S.Ct. 965, 10 L.Ed. 2d 80 (1963); Lavender v. Kurn, 327 U.S. 645, 66 S.Ct. 740, 90 L.Ed. 916 (1946) (Wood, supra, at p. 1168).

In Morton v. City of New Orleans, 678 F.2d 1321 (5th Cir. 1982), it was stated that it is firmly established that an Appellate Court will not reverse a Jury Verdict for excessiveness except on "the strongest of showings." The Fifth Circuit further stated that because the size of the award is primarily a question of fact, they are exceedingly hesitant to overturn the decision of a Jury, especially when the Trial Judge has approved the award, citing Shows v. Jamison Bedding, Inc., 671 F.2d 927, 933 (5th Cir. 1982).

In Morton, supra, the Fifth Circuit held that a $500,000.00 award was not excessive in light of the evidence despite the fact that Plaintiff's medical expenses totalled only $391.46, that no surgery was performed and none was indicated at the time of Trial, no wages had been lost by Plaintiff as a result of the injury, that Plaintiff experienced only minor physical discomfort and that his prognosis was generally good. Morton, supra at p. 1327.

In Terry v. Raymond International, Inc., 658 F.2d 398 (5th Cir. 1981), the Fifth Circuit stated that it will not reject a Jury's determination of damages unless the verdict "is so gross as to be contrary to reason." The Court went on to state that while the Jury's award was magnanimous, the Fifth Circuit could not say it was contrary to reason, accordingly the Jury's award of damages was affirmed. (Terry, at p. 404).

In Wallace v. Oceanering International, 727 F.2d 427 (5th Cir. 1984), the Defendants alleged that the Jury's verdict of $1,581,792.00 was excessive. The Fifth Circuit however concluded that the Jury's award is based on sufficient medical testimony and thus the award has an adequate evidentiary basis and the Fifth Circuit declined to disturb it. Thus, the Fifth Circuit held that the verdict was not contrary to reason, and further stated that when the Jury as primary factfinders awards a certain measure of damages and the Court refuses to upset that finding, that they are not at liberty to reverse those decisions absent a definite finding of error. (Wallace at p. 438, 439, citing additional cases). Likewise, in Perricone v. The Kansas City Southern Railway Co., 704 F.2d 1376 (5th Cir. 1983), the Fifth Circuit noted that "an examination of the Fifth Circuit cases in this field reveals only rare instances in which the Court felt bound to set aside a Jury award for its excessiveness. Thus, a $105,000.00 Jury verdict was upheld for a Plaintiff who had a whip lash and testified that he takes 14 anacin a day. (Perricone, at p. 1382).

The Fifth Circuit has stated that the rationale behind employing such a strict test on review is fairly simple in that the size of the award the Claimant is entitled to is generally a question of fact. The Fifth Circuit has stated that a panel of impartial Jurors that have an opportunity to hear all the evidence and observe all of the witnesses first decided that question. Likewise, the Trial Judge, with a similar opportunity to hear and observe, then concurred with the propriety of the panel decision when he or she denied a Defendant's Motion for New Trial. Thus, a reviewing Court should be exceedingly hesitant in overturning the decision of the Jury and the Trial Judge. The reason being is that the Appellate Court's decision must necessarily be made without the opportunity to observe the Claimant and various other witnesses and also, the factors which must be considered in determining the amount of money a Claimant is entitled to are not readily translated into dollar amounts. The Fifth Circuit has further stated that in most cases, there is no reason to assume that a three Judge Appellate Court is better equipped to make this translation than a panel of Jurors or the Trial Judge. In fact, the opposite assumption is probably more appropriate. See Bridges v. Groendyke Transport, Inc., 533 F.2d 877, 880 (5th Cir. 1977).

In its opinion, the Fifth Circuit stated that the "maximum verdict" for pain and suffering that the Trial Court should have let stand, on this record was $250,000.00. Likewise, the Appellate Court held that the "maximum verdict" for care and services to MRS. HANSEN, that the District Court should have permitted to stand, without remittitur, was $40,000.00. The basis for the Fifth Circuit's conclusion is what the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit has designated as the "maximum recovery rule."

It appears that the "maximum recovery rule" originated with regard to proof of special damages only, or that the amount awarded actually exceeded the amount originally sued for, as plead in the body of a Petition. Another example, as will be shown below is in regard to medical expenses, for example when the Jury awards more money than the testimony showed was actually proven, at the time of Trial. In Abernathy v. South Pacific Co., 426 F.2d (5th Cir. 1970), the Fifth Circuit remitted the amount awarded to coincide with the medical expenses actually proved at the time of Trial. Similarly, the case of Carlton v. H. C. Price Co., 640 F.2d 573 (5th Cir. 1981), dealt with future medical awarded by the Jury.

The Jury awarded what the Plaintiffs had sued for, however, the Plaintiffs did not prove up that particular amount of medical at the time of Trial, and thus the "maximum recovery" was for the amount which had been properly proved in regards to this form of special damages.

Likewise, in Stapleton v. Kawasaki Heavy Industries, Ltd., 608 F.2d 571 (5th Cir. 1979), the Jury once again awarded the amount sued for in the Petition, but the proof was for a lesser sum, and thus the award was admitted to the amount actually proved, which was the "maximum that the Jury reasonably could find."

In Caldarera v. Eastern Airlines, Inc., 705 F.2d 778, 784 (5th Cir. 1983), the Fifth Circuit stated that it determines the size of the remittitur in accordance with this Circuit's "maximum recovery rule," which prescribes that the verdict must be reduced to the maximum amount the Jury could properly have awarded. Caldarera, supra, addressed remittitur of general damages, as opposed to the form of special damages as cited above. It is noted in the Caldarera decision that:

> "Unless we are to accept any verdict, in what ever amount, as a legally acceptable measure, we must review the amount a Jury or a Trial Court awards. Reassessment cannot be supported entirely by rational analysis. It is inherently subjective in large part, involving the interplay of experience and emotions as well as calculation. The sky is simply not the limit for Jury verdicts, even those that have been once reviewed." 705 F.2d at 784 (emphasis added).

Given the above, Petitioner contends that the standard provided by the Fifth Circuit with regard to its "maximum recovery rule" amounts to a re-weighing of the facts, whereby the verdict of the Fifth Circuit is substituted for that of the Jury, whereby the Appellate Court does in fact re-weigh the evidence and draws different inferences or conclusions from said evidence, and thus concludes that other results might be more reasonable. Thus, the theory of remittitur as set forth by the Fifth Circuit's "maximum recovery rule" goes against not only the previous standard established by the Fifth Circuit, and the standard set forth by this Court in Grunenthal, it operates to substitute the verdict of the Fifth Circuit, in place of that of the Jury, which effectively precludes a Trial by Jury, as is established by the Seventh Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. Thus, the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit has exceeded its limited scope of review, which is merely to determine whether there was consistent and substantial evidence in the record which fairly tends to support the verdict.

Furthermore, the Fifth Circuit's opinion does not make a detailed appraisal of the evidence bearing on the damages awarded, and thus there is no finding that, in light of such detailed evidence, the amount of the Jury is so high that it would be a denial of justice to permit it to stand, as prescribed by the Supreme Court of the United States.

For cases in which the Fifth Circuit has previously held not to have been excessive, see Crador v. Louisiana Department of Highways, 625 F.2d 1227 (5th Cir. 1980); Menard v. Penrod Drilling Co., 538 F.2d 1084, 1089 (5th Cir. 1976); Bryan v. John Bean Division of FMC Corp., 566 F.2d 541 (5th Cir. 1978); Gorsalitz v. Olin Mathieson Chemical Corp., 429 F.2d 1033 (5th Cir. 1970), cert. denied, 407 U.S. 921, 92 S.Ct. 2463, 32 L.Ed.2d 807 (1972).

Petitioner herein contends that the matters set forth above do not only apply to the Fifth Circuit's remitting the actual damages awarded by the Jury, but also applies to the remittitur of the award of the Jury which represents Punitive damages.

In its opinion, the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit states that the Jury awarded HANSEN punitive damages that approximately equalled actual damages. Thus, having determined that a remittitur of actual damages is required in this case, the Fifth Circuit found that a proportionate reduction of Punitive damages was required. Accordingly, the Punitive damages in the original amount of $1,000,000.00 was remitted to $300,-000.00. Thus, Petitioner contends, as is set forth below, that said actions of the Fifth Circuit were certainly not required, and that the reason set forth in the opinion for the proposition that such reduction is required, contradicts the long established rules regarding the awarding of Punitive damages, together with the long established standard as to the fomula between actual damages awarded to that of Punitive damages awarded.

Given the above, in the case of Miley v. Oppenheimer & Co., Inc., 637 F.2d 318 (5th Cir. 1981), there was a challenge to the Punitive damage award of $1,000,000.-00 as being excessive. The Court of Appeals of the Fifth Circuit went on to state that both parties agreed on the relevant test employed in Texas to assess the fairness of a Punitive damage award. The Court further stated that in determining whether exemplary damages are excessive, Texas Courts consider four (4) factors: (1) The degree of outrage produced by the evil, (2) The frequency of the evil, (3) The size of the award needed to deter similar wrongs in future, and (4) the ratio between exemplary damages and actual damages. Citing, Southwestern Investment Co. v. Neeley, 452 S.W.2d 705, 707 (Tex. 1970); Estate of Arrington v. Fields, 578 S.W.2d 173, 183 (Tex. Civ. App.—Tyler, 1979, writ ref'd n.r.e.).

The Fifth Circuit went on to state in Miley, supra, that they do not decide what amount of Punitive damages should be awarded but they feel that a formula of Punitive damages is equal to three times compensatory damages is a fairly good standard against which to assess whether a Jury abused its discretion. The Court went on to state that there is nothing magical about the three-times-compensatory damages formula, and many Courts which have weighed the kind of factors which comprise the Texas four-part test in awarding punitive damages have selected that figure.

Given the above, it is clear that the Fifth Circuit was not required as set forth in its opinion to reduce the amount of Punitive Damages awarded by the Jury. The Fifth Circuit recognized the standard and authorities set forth herein, as the same pertains to the award of Punitive damages, and the ratio to actual damages, and even though it is contended herein that the actual damages should not have been remitted by the Fifth Circuit, given said remittitur, the award of punitive damages in the amount of $1,000,000.00, as determined by the Jury, is still in line with well established case law regarding the ratio between compensatory damages and punitive damages.

As a result of the above, it is contended herein that the award of Punitive damages should have been sustained by the Fifth Circuit and that a reduction of said Punitive damages was in error.

The decision of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit with the operation of the "maximum recovery rule" conflicts with opinions of other circuits regarding the scope of Appellate review, as the same pertains to a General Damage Award which is claimed as being excessive. See Dagnello v. Long Island R. Co., 289 F.2d 797, 806 (2nd Cir. 1961); West v. Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad Co., 528 F.2d 290 (4th Cir. 1975); Huff v. White Motor Corp., 609 F.2d 286 (7th Cir. 1979).

CONCLUSION

Therefore, the "maximum recovery rule" of the Fifth Circuit which prescribes that the verdict must be reduced to the maximum amount the Jury could properly have awarded sets an arbitrary standard, in substitution of the Jury process and the actions of the Trial Judge, and goes beyond the allowable scope of review, as the same pertains to excessive damage awards, and operates to deprive the litigant of a Trial by Jury, as is guaranteed by the Seventh Amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America. The "maximum recovery rule," as recently established by the Fifth Circuit for General Damage Awards conflicts with well established reasoning of the Fifth Circuit, together with the standard that the Fifth Circuit has established through prior case law opinions, and also conflicts with decisions of other Circuits regarding the scope of Appellate review, as the same pertains to the review of Jury Awards as being excessive. Furthermore, the Fifth Circuit's opinion does not make a detailed appraisal of the evidence bearing on the damages awarded, and thus there is no finding that, in light of such detailed evidence, the amount of the Jury is so high that it would be a denial of justice to permit it to stand, as prescribed by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Accordingly, this Petition should be granted and the opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, as the same pertains to a remittitur of the damages awarded by the Jury, be reversed and the case remanded to the Appellate Court with direction to enter a Judgment affirming the Jury Award of the District Court.

IN THE
UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

No. 82-2276

BEATRICE MAE HANSEN, ET AL.,
Plaintiffs-Appellees,

v.

JOHNS-MANVILLE PRODUCTS
CORPORATION, ET AL.,
Defendants,

JOHNS-MANVILLE SALES CORPORATION,
Defendant-Appellant.

Appeal from the United States District Court
for the Southern District of Texas

(June 11, 1984)

Before RUBIN and RANDALL, Circuit Judges, and SEAR,* District Judge.

RANDALL, Circuit Judge:

Johns-Manville Sales Corporation and Johns-Manville Products Corporation (collectively "Johns-Manville")

* SEAR, District Judge of the Eastern District of Louisiana, sitting by designation.

appeal a jury verdict awarding compensatory and punitive damages to the widow of Andrew Hansen, a former shipyard worker, for wrongful death caused by exposure to Johns-Manville asbestos products. We affirm as to liability, but remand to the district court to order a remittitur or a new trial at the option of the plaintiff.

I.

Andrew Hansen ("decedent") began working for Todd Shipyards in 1940 as a pipefitter, tearing out old insulation in ships and installing new insulation. During his employment, decedent worked primarily with products containing asbestos[1] that were manufactured by Johns-Manville. Decedent suffered a serious ankle injury in 1976 and retired due to that injury.

In 1978, at age 65, decedent developed chest problems. He was ultimately diagnosed as suffering from asbestosis and mesothelioma, both of which are caused by exposure to asbestos.[2] Thirteen months later, he died.

1. Asbestos is the name of a group of naturally occurring fibrous minerals known for their properties of relative indestructibility and resistance to heat and fire. During World War II, the protective clothing, insulation and shipbuilding industries created a dramatic increase in the demand for asbestos. Once considered harmless, asbestos is now regarded as one of the most dangerous of all natural minerals. See Special Project, An Analysis of the Legal, Social, and Political Issues Raised by Asbestos Litigation, 36 Vand. L. Rev. 573 (1983).

2. Parenchymal asbestosis is the earliest known and most common asbestos-related disease. In some cases, asbestosis may become manifest within ten years of the date of initial exposure. In general, asbestosis manifests itself between ten and twenty-five years after initial exposure. Inhalation of asbestos fibers initiates a scarring process that destroys air sacs in healthy lung tissue. The result is a decrease in pulmonary function and lung volume. Symptoms include shortness of breath, coughing, chest pains and clubbing of fingers. The disease is not always fatal, but it is progressive and incurable.

Decedent's widow ("Hansen") filed suit against Johns-Manville and thirteen other defendants in 1979. Hansen alleged causes of action based upon strict liability for the manufacture of the asbestos-containing insulation and upon negligence for failure to adequately test and inspect, and for failure to warn. Prior to trial, all defendants, except Johns-Manville, were non-suited on Hansen's motion. A jury trial was then held. The jury returned answers to special interrogatories finding for Hansen on all counts and awarded Hansen $260,000 for loss of care and services, $800,000 for decedent's anguish and pain and suffering, and $1,000,000 in punitive damages. Judgment in the amount of $2,060,000 was entered by the district court on May 11, 1982. Johns-Manville's motions for judgment n.o.v., remittitur, and new trial were denied. Johns-Manville appeals.

II.

On appeal, Johns-Manville raises twelve distinct issues relating to evidence submitted at trial, interrogatories submitted to the jury, the various post-judgment motions, and the award of punitive damages. We will address each of these issues in turn.

Deposition Testimony of Dr. Kenneth Smith.

Johns-Manville asserts that the trial judge erred in admitting the deposition testimony of Dr. Kenneth Smith,

Mesothelioma is a malignant tumor in the membrane lining of the lungs, chest cavity and abdominal cavity which metastizes quickly and is generally fatal. Unlike asbestosis, no relationship between the degree of exposure to asbestos and development of the disease has been established. Mesothelioma has developed in individuals exposed to minimal quantities of asbestos. See Comment, Asbestosis: Who Will Pay the Plaintiff? 57 Tul. L. Rev. 1491, 1491-93 (1983); Special Project, supra note 1, at 579.

former medical officer of Johns-Manville, because no proper foundation was laid showing the nature of his employment at the time of the deposition, the course of his knowledge, or his authority to speak for the company. See generally H. Wigmore, Evidence § 654 (3d ed. 1940). This argument is without merit. Dr. Smith's deposition clearly reveals the nature of his medical practice at the time of the taking of the deposition. As to the course of his knowledge, Dr. Smith's deposition relates his educational background and the fact that he served as Medical Director of Johns-Manville until 1966. Finally, since Dr. Smith was not testifying as an agent for Johns-Manville, authority to speak as an agent was not required. Dr. Smith's deposition was properly admitted.

The "Sumner Simpson" Papers.

Johns-Manville contends that the district court erred in admitting into evidence several documents from the "Sumner Simpson" papers. These papers consist of various correspondence, surveys and memoranda compiled by Sumner Simpson, the President and later Chairman of the Board of Raybestos Corporation ("Raybestos"), and discovered after his death. Raybestos, like Johns-Manville, employed asbestos in its products. Several documents from the collected papers were admitted into evidence to show that Johns-Manville knew of the alleged dangers of asbestos prior to 1964 and thus was negligent and grossly negligent in failing to warn of those dangers. Johns-Manville objects to the admission of these documents on the grounds that the papers were not authenticated, that they were heasay and not within any exception, and that they are irrelevant to any issue in the case.

In a similar case decided recently by this court, Jackson v. Johns-Manville Sales Corp., No. 82-4288, slip op. at 2736 (5th Cir. March 23, 1984), we held that the district court erred in admitting three letters from the Sumner Simpson papers, including one admitted in the present case, on the ground that they were relevant to no issue in the case. We determined that, because the letters introduced concerned studies having to do with workers in asbestos mines, they were irrelevant to the issue of the defendants' knowledge of dangers regarding insulation workers. We need not decide, however, whether admission of the Sumner Simpson papers was erroneous in this case, for even assuming, arguendo, that such admission was error, we find that, on the record presented in this case, it was harmless error.

The Sumner Simpson papers were introduced in this case to show that Johns-Manville knew or should have known of the dangers of asbestos to shipyard workers and insulators prior to 1964 and thus, that Johns-Manville had a duty to warn of that danger. However, Hansen presented other evidence, particularly the testimony of Dr. Smith,[3] which would show that Johns-Manville knew of the dangers of asbestos to insulation workers well before 1964. Thus, the introduction of the Sumner Simpson papers was merely cumulative. It is well settled that the improper admission of evidence that is merely cumulative on matters shown by other admissible evidence is harmless error. Coughlin v. Capitol Cement Co., 571 F.2d 290, 307 (5th Cir. 1978). Thus, even if the district court erred in admitting the Sumner Simpson papers in this case, an issue that we expressly do not decide, it was harmless error.

3. Dr. Smith testified that he told Johns-Manville of the dangers asbestos presented to insulation workers as early as the 1940s.

Punitive Damages/Gross Negligence.

Johns-Manville raises several issues with regard to the jury's finding of gross neglience and award of punitive damages. Under Texas law, a plaintiff is entitled to punitive damages upon a showing of gross negligence, i.e., that the defendant was consciously, knowingly indifferent to the plaintiff's welfare and safety. Maxey v. Freightliner Corp., 665 F.2d 1367, 1374 (5th Cir. 1982). Johns-Manville argues that the potential for overkill in the award of punitive damages in mass products liability situations such as this[4] is inconsistent with the underlying policy objectives of both strict liability and punitive damages. Johns-Manville also argues that it has been subjected to repeated awards of punitive damages, thus unconstitutionally subjecting it to double jeopardy. Johns-Manville further argues that the district court erred in denying its motions for directed verdict,[5] judgment n.o.v., and new

4. Approximately 30,000 individual plaintiffs have filed suits against asbestos manufacturers since 1973, and industry experts predict that plaintiffs will file an additional 500 suits each month. The potential liability of Johns-Manville alone for compensatory damages alone has been estimated to exceed $2 billion. On August 26, 1982, Johns-Manville filed for Chapter 11 reorganization, claiming that the exposure it faced in asbestos litigation threatened its solvency and, ultimately, its viability. In support of its claim, Johns-Manville pointed out that in 1981 and the first half of 1982 litigation had resulted in ten punitive damage verdicts against it at an average of $616,000 per verdict. In re Johns-Manville Corp., No. 82 B (S.D. N.Y. petition filed August 26, 1982). See generally Special Project, supra note 1, at 691.

5. Johns-Manville presents this argument as "[t]he trial court erred in submitting special interrogatory no. 8 (having to do with gross negligence) because there was no evidence to support its submission." Because Johns-Manville is arguing that the issue should not have been submitted to the jury because of insufficient evidence, this argument is more properly addressed to the district court's denial of Johns-Manville's motion for directed verdict. We will treat it as such. Subsequent issues that were similarly presented will be treated as appeals from the denial of a directed verdict as well.

trial with regard to gross negligence and punitive damages.

In Jackson v. Johns-Manville Sales Corp., supra, we held that Mississippi substantive law would disallow punitive damages in asbestos products liability actions. In Jackson, the plaintiff, who had contracted asbestosis, brought a products liability action against Johns-Manville and Raybestos-Manhattan, Inc. After the jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff and awarded actual and punitive damages, the defendants appealed. A panel of this court disallowed the punitive damages awarded, holding that Mississippi substantive law would disallow such awards in a similar situation, because in the extraordinary circumstances in which asbestosis litigation is set, the allowance of punitive damages is incompatible with the objectives of and would disrupt the viability of the strict liability cause of action. Finding that strict liability in Mississippi "seeks not merely to assure compensation for the individual plaintiff, but to achieve the broader societal objective of equitable loss distribution," the Jackson panel determined that the presence of a viable enterprise is essential to the maintenance of effective loss distribution in strict liability. Because of the number of similar suits already filed, asbestos defendants face repeated assessments of punitive damages that threaten to exhaust their resources. Therefore, the panel determined that, at the point at which awards of punitive damages destroy the viability of the enterprise, the remedy of punitive damages becomes antithetical to the policy of strict liability and thus, that punitive damages must not be allowed. Furthermore, the panel found that the basic policy objectives of punitive damages—punishment and deterrence—are satisfied by multiple exposure to compensatory damages. Johns-Manville presents similar arguments in the present case, urging that the very attributes of the Mississippi law of strict liability that prompted the Jackson panel to find that Mississippi law would disallow punitive damages in this type of case are present in Texas law as well. Thus, Johns-Manville argues, this panel should follow the panel decision in Jackson.

Following a review of the relevant decisions of the Texas courts, we find that we are unable to follow Jackson in this case. At least one Texas court has said that punitive damages may be recovered under Article 16, Section 26 of the Constitution of the State of Texas[6] in a strict liability action for the death of the user of a defective product. Heil Co. v. Grant, 534 S.W.2d 916, 926 (Tex. Civ. App.—Tyler 1976 writ ref'd n.r.e.) ("We believe that exemplary damages may be recovered under [Tex. Const. art. 16, section 26] in a strict liability action for the death of the user of a defective product."); see also Maxey v. Freightliner Corp., 665 F.2d 1367, 1371-72 & n.4 (5th Cir. 1982).[7] To be sure, Heil did not involve a mass products liability situation such as the one

6. Article 16, section 26 provides:

> Every person, corporation, or company, that may commit a homicide, through a wilful act, or omission, or gross neglect, shall be responsible, in exemplary damages, to the surviving husband, widow, heirs of his or her body, or such of them as there may be. . . .

Tex. Const. art. 16, section 26.

7. In Maxey, we were presented with the argument that, as a matter of law, punitive damages are not available in products liability cases in Texas. Noting the language of Heil, we said: "Absent some reason to believe that the Texas courts, when presented with the question, will erect such a bar to recovery of exemplary damages, which otherwise are guaranteed by the Texas Constitution, this Court is reluctant to do so." 665 F.2d at 1371 n.4. There have been no such indications from the Texas courts within the intervening two years that would convince us to depart from our conclusion in Maxey.

facing this court in Jackson and in the present case. However, to the extent that punitive damages are guaranteed to claimants by the Texas Constitution, such a fact is irrelevant; article 16, section 26 does not distinguish between mass torts and singular torts. We also recognize that the above-referenced language in Heil is dicta. But, while it is not definitively settled that punitive damages are guaranteed by the Texas Constitution in strict liability actions for the death of a user of a defective product, the only suggestion we have from the Texas courts is that there is, indeed, such a right. Absent a clear indication from the Texas courts to the contrary, we are Erie-bound not to dictate otherwise. Accordingly, we find no basis upon which to hold that Texas courts would disallow punitive damages in a case such as this.[8]

Johns-Manville next contends that the award of punitive damages in mass tort cases is unconstitutional because punitive damages are analogous to criminal penalties. Thus, Johns-Manville argues that the constitution requires assurance against multiple, unrestrained punishments in the form of punitive damages. In essence, Johns-Manville is arguing that it is being subjected to double jeopardy.

8. In addition to the Texas constitutional provision, there is another factor which distinguishes Jackson and Mississippi law from the present case and Texas law. Jackson did not involve an action for wrongful death, but was instead an action for personal injury. While the Texas Supreme Court has yet to address the issue, at least one Texas appellate court has upheld an award of punitive damages in a products liability action for personal injury which did not involve wrongful death. Rawlings Sporting Goods Co. v. Daniels, 619 S.W.2d 435 (Tex. Civ. App.—Waco 1981, writ ref'd n.r.e.). Thus, there is some suggestion that the Texas courts may allow punitive damages in products liability actions even in cases not covered by article 16, section 26, an issue which we need not decide in this case.

The fifth amendment guarantee against double jeopardy, applicable to the states through the fourteenth amendment, protects against multiple punishments for the same offense. North Carolina v. Pearce, 395 U.S. 711, 717 (1968). However, the jeopardy to which the fifth amendment refers is not present in proceedings that are not "essentially criminal." Breed v. Jones, 421 U.S. 519, 528 (1974). In Breed, the Supreme Court faced the question of whether juvenile proceedings are "essentially criminal" for purposes of the double jeopardy prohibition. In finding that juvenile proceedings are "essentially criminal," the Court relied upon the purpose of the proceeding, the potential consequences, and the fact that the action was brought by and backed by the resources of the state. The Court found that the purpose of the juvenile proceeding was to determine whether the defendant had committed acts that violate a criminal law. The possible consequences of the proceeding were the stigma inherent in the determination of a criminal violation and the deprivation of liberty for many years.

Based upon Breed, we determine that punitive damages awarded in a private lawsuit by an individual plaintiff are not part of an "essentially criminal" proceeding and, thus, do not fall within the purview of the prohibition against double jeopardy. A jury's determination that a homicide has occurred as a result of gross negligence necessary to award punitive damages is not a determination that a criminal law has been violated. Moreover, that determination does not carry with it the conseqeunces that the Breed Court found necessary for an "essentially criminal" proceeding. While Johns-Manville will be deprived of property, it will not suffer the stigma normally accompanying criminal proceedings. Thus, the consequences that attend the type of proceeding involved here are not of the variety that the Court has recognized as rising to the level of requiring protection against double jeopardy. Perhaps more importantly, this is not an action brought by the state, but one brought by a private individual. We have uncovered no cases, and Johns-Manville points us to none, in which a court has afforded double jeopardy protection as to any proceeding that was not initiated by the state. Accordingly, we do not find that Johns-Manville has been subjected to double jeopardy in violation of the fourteenth amendment.

Johns-Manville next contends that the district court erred in denying its motion for directed verdict and motion for judgment n.o.v. with relation to gross negligence and punitive damages. The propriety of a district court's denial of a directed verdict or judgment n.o.v. is measured by the standard set by this court in Boeing Co. v. Shipman, 411 F.2d 365, 374 (5th Cir. 1969) (en banc):

> If the facts and inferences point so strongly and overwhelmingly in favor of one party that the Court believes that reasonable men could not arrive at a contrary verdict, granting of the motions is proper. On the other hand, if there is substantial evidence opposed to the motions, that is, evidence of such quality and weight that reasonable and fair-minded men in the exercise of impartial judgment might reach different conclusions, the motions should be denied, and the case submitted to the jury. A mere scintilla of evidence is insufficient to present a question for the jury.

On appeal, the court is to view all the evidence with all reasonable inferences most favorable to the nonmoving party. Campbell v. Bowlin, 724 F.2d 484, 489 (5th Cir.

1984). Thus, the question before this court on appeal is whether there was sufficient evidence concerning Hansen's allegations of gross negligence to present a jury question.

Gross negligence is defined under Texas law as "that entire want of care which would raise the belief that the act or omission complained of was a result of a conscious indifference to the right or welfare of the person . . . affected by it." Missouri Pacific Railroad Co. v. Shuford, 72 Tex. 165, 10 S.W. 408, 411 (1888); see also Maxey v. Freightliner Co., supra, at 1372; Burk Royalty Co. v. Walls, 616 S.W.2d 911 (Tex. 1981). Punitive damages may be awarded upon a showing of gross negligence. Johns-Manville argues that it submitted evidence that showed that it made efforts to inspect its products and to participate in safety studies; that it began to issue warnings with its asbestos-containing products in 1964, as soon as scientific evidence was available that proved a relationship between those products and asbestosis; and that it developed an asbestos-free replacement in 1971. This evidence, Johns-Manville argues, represents strange behavior for a defendant who allegedly was wilfully, intentionally and consciously indifferent to decedent's rights, welfare and safety. However, although much evidence in favor of Johns-Manville was developed at trial, the question confronting this court is not whether this court as a trier of fact would decide the issue in favor of one side or the other, but whether there was sufficient evidence in support of Hansen's claim to present a jury question. We hold that there was. Hansen presented the testimony of Dr. Smith, a former medical officer of Johns-Manville. Dr. Smith testified that he informed Johns-Manville of the hazards asbestos presented to asbestos insulation workers and recommended placing warnings on insulation products as early as the 1940s, but that Johns-Manville did not act on his recommendations. We believe that this evidence is sufficient to present a jury question. If the jury believed the testimony of Dr. Smith, they could reasonably find that Johns-Manville had been grossly negligent in failing to warn Hansen of the dangers related to its products. It is the function of the jury, not the court, to determine the credibility of witnesses. Boeing Co. v. Shipman, supra, at 375. Accordingly, we hold that the district court properly denied Johns-Manville's motion for a directed verdict and motion for judgment n.o.v. with relation to gross negligence and punitive damages.

Johns-Manville also argues that the district court erred in denying its motion for a new trial with relation to gross negligence and punitive damages, alleging that the jury's answers to special interrogatories were against the great weight of the evidence. On a motion for new trial, the trial judge is free to weigh the evidence and may grant a new trial if he believes the verdict is contrary to the weight of the evidence. United States v. An Article of Drug . . . 4,680 Pails, 775 F.2d 976, 989-90 (5th Cir. 1984). However, as an appellate court, our review of the denial of a new trial is severely limited; we may interfere only when the trial court abuses its discretion or fails to exercise it. Id.; Bazile v. Bisso Marine Co., 606 F.2d 101 (5th Cir. 1979). Thus, we review the denial of a motion for new trial based on insufficiency of the evidence only to determine whether there was an "absolute absence of evidence to support the jury's verdict." Dunn v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 639 F.2d 1171, 1175 (5th Cir. 1981). We do not find such an "absolute absence" in this case.

Negligent Failure to Test.

Johns-Manville next argues that the district court erred in refusing to grant a directed verdict on Hansen's claim of negligent failure to test and inspect its asbestos products.[9] Johns-Manville asserts that the record is awash with evidence of its efforts to test and inspect its products, and its participation as early as 1929 in studies regarding asbestos-containing products. Johns-Manville points specifically to evidence that shows that it supported, funded, and provided personnel for the Selikoff studies, funded the Lanza studies, participated in the Trudeau studies, was a funding sponsor of the Brayn-Truan studies, and helped fund the Vorwall studies. However, each of these studies was conducted after the products were already on the market, and thus this evidence does not go to the central inquiry of the issue submitted to the jury—whether Johns-Manville was negligent in failing to test and inspect its asbestos products before making them available on the market.[10] Thus, we find that sufficient questions were raised by the evidence as to whether Johns-Manville tested its products within the relevant time frame to submit the issue to the jury. See Borel v. Fibreboard Paper Products Corp., 493 F.2d 1076, 1090-91 (5th Cir. 1973) (manufacturer has duty to inspect and test product prior to putting product on market).

9. See supra note 4.

10. The special interrogatory submitted to the jury inquired:

> Do you find from a preponderance of the evidence that on the occasion in question the defendant was negligent
> (c) in failing to test and inspect its asbestos products to discover the dangerous propensities of such products before making them available in the market.

Government Specification Defense.

Johns-Manville requested that the trial judge submit the following instruction and special interrogatory to the jury:

> Where the United States Government, or an agency of the United States Government, requires that a product be manufactured and sold in conformity with governmental specifications, a manufacturer may rely upon the specifications in the manufacture and sale of its product; a manufacturer or seller is not liable for conduct arising out of the conformity of its products with such governmental specifications.
> Do you find from a preponderance of the evidence that the Defendant manufactured and sold, in accordance with United States governmental specifications, the asbestos containing products of Defendant which were a producing, (proximate) cause of Andrew Hansen's injury?

The trial judge refused to give the requested instruction and to submit the special interrogatory.

In federal court, "a litigant is entitled to have the jury instructed as to his claims and theories of law if they are legally correct, supported by the evidence, and are brought to the court's attention in a timely request." Corey v. Jones, 650 F.2d 803, 806 (5th Cir. 1981). Johns-Manville contends that the district court's refusal to instruct the jury was error because "government specification" is a defense in an asbestosis case and the evidence in the record supported submission of the issue to the jury. We do not agree.

The government specification defense has three elements: establishment of product specifications by the government, manufacture in accordance with those specifications, and government knowledge equal to that of the manufacturer of the hazards. In re Agent Orange Product Liability Litigation, 506 F.Supp. 762, 792-96 (E.D.N.Y. 1980). The rationale behind the defense is an extension of sovereign immunity: in circumstances in which the government would not be liable, private contractors who act pursuant to government directives should not be liable. Id. Johns-Manville, citing three unpublished opinions from the Western District of Washington, contends that this defense is available to manufacturers in asbestos cases.

Johns-Manville has cited no cases in which Texas courts have recognized a "government specification" defense; nor has it cited us to any cases that suggest that Texas courts would adopt such a theory. Absent some reason to believe that the Texas courts, when presented with the question, would adopt such a defense, we are unwilling to do so. Moreover, even were we to adopt such a defense, we do not believe that it would apply in this case. Todd Shipyards, Hansen's employer, performed work under government contract for only five of Hansen's twenty-six years of employment. We do not think that the defense would apply in these circumstances. Accordingly, we hold that the district court did not err in refusing the requested instruction and interrogatory.

Refusal of Instruction as to Taxability of Damage Awards.

Johns-Manville requested that the district court instruct the jury that damage awards are not subject to federal taxation. The district court refused. Johns-Manville asserts that this refusal was error. We do not agree. This case is brought under Texas law, and that law applies to the question whether such an instruction was warranted. Cioce v. Brumley Corp., 623 F.2d 1084, 1097 (5th Cir. 1980). Texas law explicitly disapproves of such an instruction because it introduces a collateral matter into the damage issue. Missouri-Kansas-Texas R.R. Co. v. McFerrin, 291 S.W.2d 931, 945 (Tex. 1956); Caterpillar Tractor Co. v. Gonzales, 599 S.W. 2d 633 (Tex. Civ. App.—El Paso 1980, writ ref'd n.r.e.). Johns-Manville's reliance upon Norfolk & Western Railway Co. v. Liepelt, 444 U.S. 490 (1980), and Gulf Offshore Co. v. Mobil Oil Corp., 628 S.W.2d 171 (Tex. Civ. App.—Houston [14th Dist.] 1982, writ ref'd n.r.e.), in an attempt to show a "trend" in Texas courts to allow such instructions is misplaced. The Supreme Court, in Liepelt, directed such instructions in suits brought under the Federal Employers' Liability Act; Gulf Offshore was a case brought under Louisiana substantive law. Thus, both cases are inapposite to this case, brought under Texas law. The district court properly refused to give the requested instruction.

Denial of Motion for New Trial Based Upon Juror Misconduct.

During voir dire, all jurors were asked whether they or their family had previously worked with or around asbestos products. Johns-Manville contends that one juror concealed the fact that he had worked as a pipefitter while in the Navy and that, in that job, he had worked with asbestos products. Johns-Manville contends that this juror had done the same type of work as decedent had performed and that he was aware that he had worked around asbestos. Johns-Manville maintains that, had it known of this juror's work with asbestos-insulated pipes, it would have excluded him as a juror. Johns-Manville's motion for a new trial based on jury misconduct was denied.

We review the denial of a motion for new trial for abuse of discretion. Bunch v. Walter, 673 F.2d 127 (5th Cir. 1982). We do not find that the district court abused its discretion in this case. Johns-Manville's allegations concerning jury misconduct arise out of a court-approved tape recorded conversation between Johns-Manville's counsel and the juror. After carefully reviewing the transcript of that conversation, we are convinced that there was no jury misconduct and that Johns-Manville's allegations are meritless. The juror stated that he was in the Navy during the Korean conflict and that he was classified as a pipefitter, but that his job was more properly characterized as a general handyman. Most of the pipefitting work was done on shore by others; his pipefitting work consisted of necessary repairs at sea and as to those he said, "I can't even really recall occasions of having that kind of problems." When asked if he ever installed or tore out insulation, the juror replied that he had never even seen any insulation on board ship. Finally, when asked if whether, in his work as a pipefitter, he ever had occasion to do any work with asbestos insulation on pipes, he answered, "if that was the type of covering." The juror's answer thus indicates that he had no prior knowledge of working with asbestos. We find that the district court did not abuse its discretion in denying Johns-Manville's motion for a new trial.

Refusal To Grant a Remittitur.

The jury awarded Hansen $260,000 in damages for the loss of her husband's care and services; $800,000 for the decedent's pain and suffering; and $1,000,000 in punitive damages. Johns-Manville moved for remittitur, which the trial court denied. On appeal, Johns-Manville asserts that the district court erred in refusing its motion.

We have recently summarized the scope of this court's review in cases in which remittitur is urged:

> The jury's award is not to be disturbed unless it is entirely disproportionate to the injury sustained. We have expressed the extent of distortion that warrants intervention by requiring such awards to be so large as to "shock the judicial conscience," "so gross or inordinately large as to be contrary to right reason," so exaggerated as to indicate "bias, passion, prejudice, corruption, or other improper motive," or as "clearly exceed[ing] that amount that any reasonable man could feel the claimant is entitled to." Nonetheless, when a jury's award exceeds the bounds of any reasonable recovery, we must suggest a remittitur ourselves or direct the district court to do so. Our power to grant a remittitur is the same as that of the district court. We determine the size of the remittitur in accordance with this circuit's "maximum recovery rule," which prescribes that the verdict must be reduced to the maximum amount the jury could properly have awarded.

Caldarera v. Eastern Airlines, Inc., 705 F.2d 778, 784 (5th Cir. 1983) (footnotes omitted).

We turn first to the jury's award of $260,000 to Hansen for care, services, advice, counsel and contributions of a pecuniary value that decedent would have provided but for his death. Johns-Manville asserts that the award of $260,000 is excessive because decedent was retired, had no plans to go back to work, and the only "services" he performed were driving the car and keeping the check-book. Hansen points out that she does not drive and that she was totally dependent upon decedent to take her wherever she wanted to go. She argues that this service along with that of keeping the checkbook, as well as the care, advice, counsel and attention that decedent provided, warrants the jury's award.

Selecting a value to place upon such items as care, advice, counsel, protection and attention is a difficult task. However, the very purpose of an action for wrongful death is to fix damages in money for what cannot be measured in money's worth. Thus, as we noted in Caldarera, supra:

> Unless we are to accept any verdict, in whatever amount, as a legally acceptable measure, we must review the amount a jury or a trial court awards. Reassessment cannot be supported entirely by rational analysis. It is inherently subjective in large part, involving the interplay of experience and emotions as well as calculation. The sky is simply not the limit for jury verdicts, even those that have been once reviewed.

705 F.2d at 784. Considering these somewhat subjective factors combined with the pecuniary value of the household services that the decedent performed, we agree with Johns-Manville that the jury verdict was excessive. The sum of $260,000 for care and services is substantially greater than any we have discovered in other reported cases.[11] We consider that the maximum verdict for care and services over the thirteen year life expectancy of decedent that the district court should have permitted to stand, without remittitur, was $40,000.

11. See, e.g., Barger v. Petroleum Helicopters, Inc., 514 F.Supp. 1199 (E.D. Tex. 1981) (award of $22,090 for loss of services of 46-year-old man); State v. Teer, 542 S.W.2d 255 (Tex. Civ. App.—Waco 1976, writ ref'd n.r.e.) (award of $15,000 for loss of household services of 26-year-old woman); C.E. Duke's Wrecker Service, Inc. v. Oakley, 526 S.W.2d 228 (Tex. Civ. App.—Houston [1st Dist.] 1975, writ ref'd n.r.e.) (award of $6,000 for loss of wife's services).

We similarly determine that the jury's award of $800,000 for pain and suffering was contrary to reason. Decedent's symptoms began to manifest themselves in May, 1978; he died thirteen months later. During most of this thirteen month period, decedent was on pain medication. While the evidence showed that decedent suffered some pain despite the medication and that he suffered mental anguish as well, we find that $800,000 is excessive.[12] Accordingly we consider that the maximum verdict for pain and suffering that the trial court should have let stand, on this record, was $250,000.

We turn next to the jury's award of punitive damages. Under Texas law, "the amount of exemplary damages should be reasonably proportioned to the actual damages found." Southwestern Investment Co. v. Neely, 452 S.W. 2d 705 (Tex. 1970); see also Maxey v. Freightliner Co., supra, at 1377. Texas courts look to five factors in evaluating whether a punitive damage award is proportionally excessive: (1) the nature of the wrong; (2) the character of the conduct involved; (3) the degree of culpability of the wrongdoer; (4) the situation and sensibilities of the parties; and (5) the extent to which the defendant's conduct offends a public sense of justice and propriety.

12. Compare with Amoco Production Co. Inc. v. Thompson, 657 S.W.2d 824 (Tex. Civ. App.—Corpus Christi 1983) ($105,000 to welder for pain and suffering occurring from severe burns); Hernandez v. Braddock, 641 S.W.2d 359 (Tex. Civ. App.—Corpus Christi 1982) ($50,000 award to woman who suffered fractured clavicle, fractured pelvis, dislocation of joints in her pelvis, and multiple skin abrasions); Ferrero v. United States, 603 F.2d 510 (5th Cir. 1979) (award of $375,000 to 53-year-old female who was severely and painfully injured in automobile accident for pain and suffering and loss of earning capacity).

First Security Bank & Trust Co. v. Roach, 493 S.W.2d 612, 619 (Tex. Civ. App.—Dallas 1973, writ ref'd n.r.e.). In addition to these factors, when an appellate court has determined that a remittitur of a substantial portion of the actual damages found by a jury is required, it must then also give consideration to the ratio between actual and punitive damages as established by the jury. Southwestern Investment Co. v. Neely, supra, at 708. See also Natco, Inc. v. Williams Brothers Engineering Co., 489 F.2d 639 (5th Cir. 1974) (district court directed to order remittitur of actual damages and proportionate remittitur of punitive damages).

The jury awarded Hansen punitive damages that approximately equaled actual damages. Having determined that a remittitur of actual damages is required in this case, we find that a proportionate reduction of punitive damages is required. Accordingly, we determine that a remittitur of punitive damages to $300,000 is proper in this case.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment of the district court is affirmed as to liability. However, we reverse as to damages, and remand to the district court. On remand, Hansen shall be given the option of accepting or rejecting the remittitur thus determined. If Hansen accepts the remittitur, the district court shall grant the remittitur and enter judgment accordingly. If Hansen refuses the remittitur, the district court shall grant a new trial solely on the issue of damages.

The judgment of the district court is AFFIRMED in part, REVERSED in part and REMANDED with instructions. Costs to be borne by appellant.

(Filed Mar. 29, 1982)

VERDICT OF THE JURY

INTERROGATORY NO. 1

Do you find from a preponderance of the evidence that Andrew T. Hansen was injured as a result of his being exposed to insulation products containing asbestos manufactured and sold by the defendant.

Answer: "Yes" or "No"

ANSWER: Yes

INTERROGATORY NO. 2

Do you find from a preponderance of the evidence that prior to 1964 it was reasonably foreseeable by defendant that occupational exposure to said products by the deceased and similarly situated workers might cause serious respiratory illness.

Answer: "Yes" or "No"

ANSWER: Yes

If your answer to Interrogatory No. 2 is "Yes," then answer Interrogatory No. 3; otherwise proceed to Interrogatory No. 5.

INTERROGATORY NO. 3

Do you find from a preponderance of the evidence that the absence of warning prior to 1964 to deceased and similarly situated users that occupational exposure to defendant's asbestos products might cause serious respiratory illness constituted a defective condition in the products which rendered their use unreasonably dangerous.

Answer: "Yes" or "No"

ANSWER: Yes

If your answer to Interrogatory No. 3 is "yes," then answer Interrogatory No. 4; otherwise proceed to Interrogatory No. 5.

INTERROGATORY NO. 4

Do you find from a preponderance of the evidence that the defective condition of the products was a producing cause of the death of the deceased, Andrew T. Hansen.

Answer: "Yes" or "No"

ANSWER: Yes

INTERROGATORY NO. 5

Do you find from a preponderance of the evidence that on the occasion in question the defendant was negligent.

(a) In failing to warn prior to 1964 that occupational exposure by the deceased to defendant's asbestos products might cause serious respiratory illness;

(b) in failing to provide the deceased with knowledge of reasonably safe protective equipment or methods of handling its products;

(c) in failing to test and inspect its asbestos products to discover the dangerous propensities of such products before making them available in the market.

Answer: "Yes" or "No" on each line in Column 1.

If any answer in Column 1 is "yes," do you find from a preponderance of the evidence that any such negligence was a proximate cause of the death of Andrew T. Hansen.

Answer: "Yes" or "No" on the corresponding line of Column 2.

	Column 1 Negligence	Column 2 Proximate Cause
(a) in failing to warn	Yes	Yes
(b) in failing to provide with knowledge	Yes	Yes
(c) in failing to test and inspect	Yes	Yes

If your answer to Interrogatory No. 4 is "yes," or if any of your answers in Column 2 of Interrogatory No. 5 are "yes," then answer Interrogatories No. 6 & No. 7; otherwise do not answer Interrogatories No. 6 and 7.

INTERROGATORY NO. 6

What sum of money, if any, if paid now in cash do you find from a preponderance of the evidence would fairly and reasonably compensate the plaintiff for her pecuniary loss, if any, resulting from the death of Andrew T. Hansen.

Consider the following elements, if any, to the extent that they are proved by a preponderance of the evidence and none other: care, services, advice, counsel, and contributions of pecuniary value that plaintiff would in reasonable probability have received from Andrew T. Hansen during his lifetime had he lived.

There is no exact standard for fixing the compensation to be awarded on account of such elements of damage. Any such award should be fair and just in light of the circumstances.

In arriving at an award of damages, you must not consider and cannot allow the plaintiff any amount of money as compensation for grief, sorrow, anguish or bereavement suffered by her as a result of the death of Andrew T. Hansen, or compensation for the loss of society, affection, or companionship of the deceased.

Answer: State an amount in dollars and cents, if any.

ANSWER: $260,000.00

INTERROGATORY NO. 7

What sum of money, if any, do you find from a preponderance of the evidence would have fairly and reasonably compensated Andrew T. Hansen for his conscious physical pain, if any, and mental anguish, if any, suffered before his death, as a result of the occurrence in question.

There is no exact standard for fixing the compensation to be awarded on account of such elements of damage. Any such award should be fair and just in light of circumstances.

Answer: State an amount in dollars and cents, if any.

ANSWER: $800,000.00

If you have answered Interrogatories No. 6 and No. 7, then answer Interrogatory No. 8; otherwise do not answer Interrogatory No. 8.

INTERROGATORY NO. 8

Do you find from a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant committed acts of gross negligence, and that such gross negligence was a proximate cause of the death of Andrew T. Hansen.

Answer: "Yes" or "No."

ANSWER: Yes

If your answer to Interrogatory No. 8 is "Yes," then answer Interrogatory No. 9; otherwise do not answer Interrogatory No. 9.

INTERROGATORY NO. 9

What sum of money, if any, do you find from a preponderance of the evidence that plaintiff should be awarded against the defendant as punitive damages for the death of Andrew T. Hansen.

Answer: State an amount in dollars and cents, if any.

ANSWER: $1,000,000.00

The foregoing constitutes the verdict of this jury.

(Filed May 11, 1982)

JUDGMENT

THE COURT, having determined that there is no just reason for delay, directs the entry of a final judgment as to plaintiff's claims against the defendant Johns-Manville Sales Corporation pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 54(b). Now, in accordance with the true verdict of the jury and the stipulations of record between the parties in this case, it is

ORDERED, ADJUDGED and DECREED that plaintiff, Beatrice Mae Hansen, recover of the defendant, Johns-Manville Sales Corporation the sum of TWO MILLION SEVENTY THOUSAND FIVE HUNDRED AND NO/100 DOLLARS ($2,070,500.00), together with interest thereon at the rate of nine percent (9%) per annum from the date of judgment until finally paid; and

Further ORDERED that the intervenors, The Travelers' Insurance Companies and Charter Oak Fire Insurance Company, have and recover from the proceeds of said judgment the sum of SIXTY-ONE THOUSAND FIVE HUNDRED AND 51/100 DOLLARS ($61,500.51), plus an additional TWO HUNDRED SIXTY-ONE AND 51/100 DOLLARS ($261.51) for each week after March 15, 1982, beginning March 22, 1982, and each week thereafter through the date of Judgment.

Taxable costs of court, if any, are assessed against the defendant.

This is a final judgment only as to plaintiff's claims against Johns-Manville Sales Corporation. Cross-actions filed by Johns-Manville Sales Corporation have been severed for trial and are pending.

FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS
GALVESTON DIVISION

CIVIL ACTION No. G-79-124

BEATRICE MAE HANSEN, etc., et al,
Plaintiff

v.

JOHNS-MANVILLE SALES CORPORATION,
Defendant

(Filed April 27, 1982)

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

Plaintiff brought this diversity action seeking actual and exemplary damages for the wrongful death of her husband, Andrew T. Hansen. Plaintiff alleged that her husband's death was caused by exposure during the course of his employment at Todd Shipyards to asbestos-containing products manufactured and sold by the defendant. The case was tried before a jury upon theories of product liability, negligence, and gross negligence.

The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, awarding the plaintiff $1,060,000 in compensatory damages. Additionally, the parties had stipulated to a sum of $10,500 as the reasonable and necessary medical expenses incurred by the decedent.

Pending before the Court is the plaintiff's motion for entry of judgment, and the defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict as to the award of punitive damages. For the reasons set forth below, the defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict is denied, and plaintiff's motion for entry of judgment is granted.

In Boeing Co. v. Shipman, 411 F.2d 365 (5th Cir. 1969), the Fifth Circuit established the standard by which this Court must determine whether there is sufficient evidence to submit a case to the jury in connection with motions for directed verdict and for judgment non obstante veredicto. Under the standard established in Boeing a motion for judgment n.o.v. should be granted only when the facts and inferences point so strongly and overwhelmingly in favor of the moving party that reasonable persons could not arrive at a contrary verdict. The Court should consider all of the evidence, not just that evidence which supports the non-movant's case—but in the light and with all reasonable inferences most favorable to the party opposed to the motion. If there is substantial evidence opposed to the motion, that is, evidence of such quality and weight that reasonable and fair-minded persons in the exercise of impartial judgment might reach different conclusions, the motion should be denied. There must be a conflict in substantial evidence to create a jury question; a mere scintilla of evidence is insufficient. However, it is the function of the jury as a traditional finder of fact, and not the court, to weigh conflicting evidence and inferences, and to determine the credibility of witnesses. Id. at 374-75; Maxey v. Freightliner Corp., 665 F.2d 1367, 1371 (5th Cir. 1982). See Schwartz v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 669 F.2d 1091, 1093 (5th Cir. 1982).

In this case the Boeing standard must be applied in light of substantive state law governing the availability of exemplary or punitive damages for wrongful death. Under Texas law, gross negligence can be a ground for punitive damages. Tex. Const. art. 16 § 26. Texas courts traditionally have defined gross negligence as "that entire want of care which would raise the belief that the act or omission complained of was the result of a conscious indifference to the right or welfare of the person or persons to be affected by it." Missouri Pacific Railroad Co. v. Shuford, 72 Tex. 165, 10 S.W. 408, 411 (1888). See Burk Royalty Co. v. Walls, 616 S.W.2d 911 (Tex. 1981).

The essence of gross negligence is not the neglect which must, of course, exist. What lifts ordinary negligence into gross negligence is the mental attitude of the defendant; that is what justifies the penal nature of the imposition of punitive damages. The plaintiff must show that the defendant was consciously, i.e., knowingly, indifferent to his rights, welfare and safety. In other words, the plaintiff must show that the defendant knew about the peril, but his acts or omission demonstrated that he did not care. Burk Royalty, supra, at 922. Thus, rather than simply inquiring whether the defendant exercised some care or no care, the proper focus under Texas law is whether, in light of all the surrounding circumstances, the requisite mental state is shown. Maxey v. Freightliner, supra, at 1374.

Having reviewed the instant record under the standard established in Boeing, as informed by the substantive principles articulated in Burk Royalty, the Court is of the opinion that the jury's finding of gross negligence, and its award of punitive damages, must be sustained. Giving proper deference to the traditional functions of the jury as the finder of fact, the Court is of the opinion that there is evidence of such quality and weight, when viewed most favorably to the plaintiff, that reasonable and fair-minded persons in the exercise of impartial judgment might reach different conclusions as to whether there was such an entire want of care as to show that the defendant was consciously indifferent to the rights, welfare, and safety of the decedent. The evidence established almost beyond dispute that the decedent's death was the result of his exposure during the 1940's to defendant's asbestos-containing products. There was a substantial evidentiary conflict as to the defendant's knowledge of the dangerous propensities of its products at that time, and the issue was properly submitted to the jury. Having determined the extent of the defendant's knowledge, the determination whether the defendant's conduct in light of all the surrounding circumstances, evidenced conscious indifference to the rights and welfare of the decedent, i.e., that the defendant "didn't care," Burk Royalty, supra, at 922, was one to be made by the finder of fact. See Schwartz v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., supra, at 1095.

Therefore, it is ORDERED, ADJUDGED and DECREED that the defendant's motion for judgment n.o.v. is DENIED, and that the plaintiff's motion for entry of judgment is GRANTED.
